

Annual Honey Production In Western Provinces Shown To Be Rapidly Increasing

That Canada is a wonderful country for beekeeping is now an undisputed fact. The climate, the wide range of flora and high average of rainfall, together with the vastness and greater part of the honey production is in high latitudes, in the drier and drier land, and being well suited, it is most suitable for beekeeping.

Until quite recently, beekeeping was practically confined to the older provinces, in Eastern Canada, especially Ontario and Quebec, and to the Maritime Provinces. It was not until 1909 that it was introduced to the Prairie Provinces. During the past years, however, and only has been increasing in the last few years, it has made a rapid advance in the Middle West, and because of this growth Canadian honey is now being exported to the United States in much more than formerly. The total crop for Canada for 1925 was estimated at well over 15,000,000 pounds. Of this, Ontario produced 10,000,000 pounds, Quebec and Saskatchewan over 4,000,000 pounds, British Columbia, 600,000 pounds, and Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, each over 100,000 pounds. No record is kept for the West, but it is estimated that the total crop for the West for 1925 was about 1,000,000 pounds. The total crop for the West for 1925 was about 1,000,000 pounds. The total crop for the West for 1925 was about 1,000,000 pounds.
